Filboard broke new ground when it launched its glittering iPad app last month that socialized the news by turning feeds from Facebook, Twitter and the like into a slick electronic magazine. Now Blanspot Media promises to bring social news pizzazz to the iPhone with its new Blanspot software. The app, now sold in Apple's App Store for $2.99, is designed to mix eye candy with interaction to create an innovative news experience for iPhone owners. We created Blanspot to offer a visually stunning and socially relevant news experience that will engage its audience by creating a more positive way to consume and share media, blanspot founder and CEO Camille LeBlanc says in a statement. We are thrilled to join efforts to make media platforms a more beautiful and elegant place to learn, share and participate in the world around us, she adds. Blanspot provides a better news option for the digital native - we give them a window into a world that includes the senses and their communities. When you start an app, a slide show appears with the music. Photos on the show are linked to the breaking news. If you like the music behind the slideshow, you can buy it right away from the iTunes store. Tapping the button on the screen appears news of the photo. From the story, you can access Twitter or a social network created by Blanspot. You can also access from a dashboard of top stories in several news categories, such as politics, culture, the planet. Blanspot is an appealing way to look at the news on the iPhone, but it's far from the groundbreaking app its creators make. (Bloomberg) - Verishop Inc. a luxury online shopping site founded by former CEO Snap Inc. Imran Khoo taking aim at Instagram with new social features on the app. Starting Monday, users will be able to upload photos and videos of themselves, tag products in their content, and track the accounts that inspire them. Verishop, launched in July 2019, houses nearly 1,000 brands, from independent labels to direct consumers and online only names from around the world. We want to double shopping from an inspiration perspective, said Jessica Anerella, who leads product design at Verishop. The new interface is reminiscent of Instagram's aesthetic, anerella admits. But the former Instagram product designer isn't too worried. It is common in design to borrow paradigms, she said. There's no point reinventing the wheel if it works. Instagram has been trying to establish itself as a shopping platform lately, but so far it's not in the corner. Its Checkout feature, launched in July last year that allows people to buy things directly through the app, used several hundred traders almost 18 months after launch. Anerella noted that what makes Verishop an experience is the shopping mindset that people have when they visit the platform on top of the all-in-one trade experience that has been lacking in social media apps. As the pandemic has forced many brick-and-mortar stores to close and lockdown orders keep people glued to their computers, more people are shopping online. Khan, Verishop's chief executive, wanted to capitalize on the phenomenon by improving the way people browse. About two-thirds of Verishop's users are under the age of 35, Khan said, hinting that it is a demographic that finds ideas online and shares stylistic choices with its followers. Verishop has hired two dozen creators to help create momentum. New content feeds that can be purchased for You and Following, features similar to bytDance Ltd.'s popular TikTok app, will allow users to get inspiration from others, while Collections, an Instagram-like feature, will allow people to tag products or posts they like. Khan thinks Verishop is ready to compete with Instagram and even Amazon.com Inc. because they have already proven their ability in e-commerce. Verishop also doesn't have a problem with fake products. Khan said, something Amazon has struggled with. For more articles like this, visit us at bloomberg.comSubscribe now to stay ahead with the most reliable source of business news.©2020 Bloomberg L.P. But the NASDAQ is over 13,000, and the S&P 500 is over 3,800, and some market watchers are beginning to wonder where the ceiling is. Banking giant JPMorgan is investigating the issue, seeking to find out how much bullish space is left to run under current market conditions. Referring to the demise of Lehman Brothers and the 2008 financial crisis, The New York Times He points out that this 'neutral' level was breached in November, with equity allocations now close to 43.8 per cent. This increase relative to the average would imply that there may not be much room for stock growth - except that the high equity allocation after Lehman, reached in January 2018, was 47.6%. To be clear, we're not there yet. Panigirtzolou sees an ongoing expansion of the M2 monetary base that is fueling a stock boom and insulating it from changes in bond markets. Against this backdrop, JPMorgan analysts are hitting the table particularly on two stocks, noting that each could rise over 30% in the year ahead. We ran the two through the TipRanks database to see what other Wall Street analysts had to say about them. ContextLogic (WISH)We will start with ContextLogic, the parent company of Wish.com. This e-commerce market has become known for its social media ads, both for its ubiquitous presence and entertainment value. Wish has a knack for attracting traffic and customers - it has become the third largest online retail site in the US, with more than 100 million monthly visitors and more than 150 million items listed for The company's revenue exceeds two billion dollars a year. The company's growth was driven by several factors: High monthly turnover, a large - and largely untapped - e-commerce customer base for low-income households looking for budget goods, and a worldwide network of more than 500 million traders. WISH recorded a lot of hype in December, when it held its IPO - and saw a price drop of almost 17% on its first trading day. The offer price was $24 per share, but the stock closed trading on day one at $20.05. Nevertheless, the company raised $1.1 billion in its first day on the market, and currently boasts a market cap of $14.5 billion. Covering JPM shares, 5-star analyst Doug Annuth wrote: We believe Wish has significant growth potential with an immediate penetration of ~3% of the global target market estimatd at 18+ households and less than 1% share of the overall global mobile trade market of $2.1 T. Wish uses data science to drive all aspects of its business from customer acquisition to pricing to logistics, which helps the company stay nimble and should drive larger globally over time. We expect Wish to achieve more consistent growth of 20%+ over the next few years... To that end, Annuth rates WISH a Overweight (i.e. Buy) and its $30 price target implies 43% positive potential for the next 12 months (i.e. Annuth's record, click here) Wall Street has tested pretty positive for this section of Moderate Buy: WISH has received 8 'buy' and 4 'hold' ratings in the past three months. Running numbers across the street, the 12-month average price target lands at $26, representing about 24% upside potential. (See ANALYSIS OF WISH shares on TipRanks) Passage Bio (PASG)The second JPM pick we're looking at is Passage Bio, a genetic drug company. The passage is aimed at developing treatments for rare, life-threatening, monogenic disorders of the central nervous system, using an aden-related virus delivery system. Monogenic disorders are caused by a mutation or defect in one gene; the aden-related virus system has been adapted to deliver the corrected gene directly to the affected cells. The company currently has three main drug candidates under development: PBGM01, a treatment for GM1 gangliosidosis; PBFT02, for the treatment of frontotemporal dementia; and PBKR03 as a treatment for Krabbe's disease. All three are in an IND-enabled development phase, and the company announced earlier this month that PBGM01 has received FDA approval to advance to phase 1/2 of the trial. PBFT02 and PBKR03 are scheduled to launch phase 1/2 later in 1H20. The positive outlook for Passage's research program underlies JPM's stock stance. 5-star analyst Anupam Rama has boosted his company's rating from Neutral to overweight and set a target price of $35, indicating a potential ~34% upside on the one-year horizon. To that record, click here) Supporting its upgrade, Rama notices FDA approval on PBGM01 and writes: [We expect] that the focus will return to upcoming GM1 mid-year data, which will represent a key initial clinical catalyst for the company. Based on known preclinical data, we are looking for initial PBGM01 GM1 data to not only de-risk the program itself, but also the company's broader platform. Analyst consensus on PASG is not unanimous, but over. A strong buy consensus rating is supported by 3 Buys vs. One Hold. The stock sells for $26.25 and the average price target of $32.83 indicates a positive side of ~25%. Plug Power Inc (NASDAQ: PLUG) shares are braced for further gains, according to H.C. Wainwright, who issued a new high street price target for the fuel cell maker. Plug Power Analyst, Analyst Amit Dayal kept the buy rating on Plug Power and raised the target price from $60 to $85. The Plug Power Thesis: Plug Power is the second major partnership in the space of a week, cementing its position as a leading and the game of fuel cells in the world. Dayal said at the battle on Wednesday. The company coined a joint venture with Renault ADR (OTC: RNLVS) in France to achieve a 30% share of Europe's light commercial fuel cell vehicle market, according to the analyst. The partnership was driven by a favorable regulatory environment for adoption outside of ICE in Europe, he said. A revenue contribution of about $10 million will come from the venture as early as 2022, with a more significant ramp to take place in 2024, Dayal said. Wainwright raised its net income and EBIT estimates for 2024 rose from $1.7 billion and $347.9 million, respectively, to $1.9 billion and $418.1 million, respectively. The partnership's contribution will increase the company's revenue growth rate to a 10-year CAGR of 50%, the analyst said. We believe that with partners such as SK Group and Renault, the company essentially has state-level support to accelerate the commercialization of hydrogen and fuel cells in Asia and Europe. Dayal also sees the possibility of the company entering into similar partnerships with heavy truck OEMs.H.C. Wainwright said he expects hydrogen and fuel cells to take a significant share of the energy and transportation market over the next decade, and Plough's leadership in fuel cells and hydrogen space could make him a dauted winner. However, one of the sources said that hundreds of workers have been laid off since mid-2020 as part of the restructuring, and that the cuts are as much as two-thirds of the total number of employees of Mahindra Automotive North America (MANA). The positions include engineers and manufacturing jobs at its Detroit plant that produces the Rexus off-road vehicle, as well as sales executives. It's business as usual for Plug Power (PLUG) stocks. After last year's unused market gains, barely two weeks to 2021, the stock is already up a dizzying 111 percent. At this rate, last year's share of 956% could still be outstamped. The latest surge comes after hydrogen fuel cells announced a new partnership to add to its expanded list of collaborations. The The In 2014, the Commission signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Groupe Renault to jointly develop several types of vehicles and infrastructure in the EU. These include light commercial, taxi and commercial human transport services and hydrogen diversion solutions, with the 50/50 joint venture expected to begin at LH21. Oppenheimer analyst Colin Rusch believes the latest agreement further strengthens PLUG's position in the hydrogen industry. With the plug announcing another strategic partnership today, we believe the company has quickly become a global company that services three continents and positions itself as a critical driver of the hydrogen economy, the 5-star analyst said. In its work with Renault PLUG, it is now partnering with No 2 Play in Europe for light commercial vehicles. We also noted Renault's ownership position in Nissan and Mitsubishi as potential opportunities for PLUG to expand its vehicle opportunity. Rusch predicts that initial delivery of vehicles will begin at the end of this year or early 2022 with the aim of achieving as many as 500K vehicles by 2030. PLUG's business has expanded to most vehicle types, and Rusch notes that Class 8 trucks remain one area in transport to which PLUG now has no significant exposure. We wouldn't be surprised to see the company target this segment with another partnership, the analyst summed up. Following the news, Rusch repeated the Outperform rating (i.e. Buy) on PLUG shares. This is not one year comes the potential for extreme gains, as even gradually a small increase in prices will mean a high percentage of gains. JPMorgan's head of small and medium cap equity strategy, Eduardo Lecubari, sees both opportunities and dangers in the current market environment - and the great potential of small capital stocks that have room to run. 1Q may be rocky after strong gains since November and the fact that estimates are sitting on all-time highs. However, the outlook for a year is encouraging due to far stronger underlying tailwinds. Such a positive backdrop is likely to keep investors chasing those few stocks that still offer a big upside recovery, as they appear to have started doing YTD. It is for this reason that we would encourage investors to build their portfolios now and happen things in the event of any consolidation phase that might come in Q1. Lecubari wrote. These powerful pain relievers are also dangerously addictive - a factor that has led to the opioid epidemic in the United States. AcetRx is a pharmaceutical company dedicated to creating safer treatments for acute pain, developing synthetic opioid drugs for sublingual (tongue) dosing. The company's main product, Sufentanil, was approved by the FDA under the name Dvsuvia in 2018 and the EU as Dzuveo in the same year. Another sublingual sufentanil solution, called Zalviso, has also been approved for use by the EU, and is in phase 3 trials in the US. In its latest earnings report, the company showed $1.4 million on the line, driven by product sales of $1.3 million. The number of sales increased by 433% in unethical, and total revenue increased by 133% compared to last year. Against this backdrop, several Street members believe ACRX's $1.40 share price looks like a steal. Cantor analyst Brandon Folkes is optimistic about Dvsuvia's prospects as an alternative to current opioid treatments, and believes the potential will shares of the company. With the launch of Dvsuvia, we believe. Believe, the focus can now shift to routing metrics and peak sales potential for the product. As ACRX launches the right alternative to IV opioids, we expect investors to start appreciating the value of the product. We believe Dvsuvia offers advances in delivering adequate pain treatment by eliminating the need for an invasive and long-lasting IV set in the emergency room, as well as outpatient or post-surgical placement. Despite the hospital driving the taking of time, we expect that accepting Dvsuvia will lead to positive revenues beyond the street's current estimates, which, in turn, could drive the stock higher than current levels. Foliked said. In keeping with its bullish stance, Folkes rates ACRX a Buy, and its $9 price target implies room for 20% upside potential over the next 12 months. The company aims to provide effective treatments for biliary, breast, colorectal, ovarian and pancreatic cancers - while avoiding complications and side effects of current chemotherapy treatments. NuCana uses phospholipid chemistry called ProTide to create a class of drugs that will overcome the limitations of existing nucleotide analogues behind many chemotherapy drugs. NuCana's ProTides have already been used in Gilead's antiviral drug Sovaldi, in. On May 10 last year, NuCana announced the relaunch of a Phase II trial on Acelarin, a drug candidate furthest along the company's pipeline, as a treatment for gallbladder cancer. The study covers more than 400 patients in 6 countries and is currently ongoing. In November, the company published data described as 'encouraging' from a Phase Ib study of the same drug. While acelarin is the leading drug in the pipeline, NuCana has two more prospects in development. NUC-3373 is in phase I trial as a treatment for solid tumors and colorectal cancers, and NUC-7738 is being investigated for second line for applications to advanced solid tumors. Of these three, colorectal study is the most immediate. Writing from Trust, 5-star analyst Robyn Karnauskas sees the pipeline as key to NuCana's investment potential. We believe that investors overlooked the fact that the NCNA platform is a company that we believe is validated, as defined by the production of clinical products. We like that he brought 3 products to the clinic, including one new drug and two improved stone chemotherapy. The data suggests that the platform works and can produce better chemotherapy [...] While investors are mainly focused on Acelarin, we believe investors should also focus on NUC-3373, another our platform product that has data expected in 1H2021.
